Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Choosing an Orchard How to choose an orchard is one of the most perplexing problems we have in horticulture and the traveller who comes to our Northwest country seeking an investment in fruit land easily becomes bewildered. He travels from one region to another only to be told in each locality that they have the best and often the only fruit district to be found. He is told many stories concerning soils, climate, etc., and is often impressed strongly with the statement that unless he will close up on a certain deal within a few hours he is losing an investment which cannot be duplicated. The average man in buying an orchard is apt to make several very serious mistakes, the first of which is that he often buys too soon. I have known of people coming into a certain section at noon and by nightfall having bought up a tract of land. This is a very foolish procedure. There is lots of very good fruit land in the states of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, and of course there is lots of poor land, but these states are so large that one can get a good investment any day in the year, and the wise man will go at the matter leisurely. He will take time to look at all phases of the question and under no circumstances will he buy land he has not seen. The possible exception to this might be that some friend in whom he has explicit confidence is vouching for the piece of land in question. A soil analysis often leads a man astray. He feels that if an analysis...
